OK!

Max and I are good friends. Both of us are tall and thin. Yesterday, we heard a strange sound when we were walking in a park. We followed the sound. We saw a little girl kneeling on the ground. She was crying. We asked her if she was okay. She said she could not find her mum. So we tried to look around for her mum. Luckily, we found her mum. The little girl smiled and thanked us. Max and I were very happy because we could help her.

Very Good!

Max and I are good friends. Both of us are tall and thin. One day, we went to Ocean Fun Amusement Park after school. We heard a strange sound when we were walking in the park. So we followed the sound. Then we saw a little girl crying and kneeling on the ground.

Max asked the girl softly, 'Hey, are you okay? Can we help?' The girl answered, 'I can't find my mum!' After that, we tried to look around for her mum. We looked for her in many places like restaurants and shops. Luckily, we found her. The little girl smiled and gave us a hug. Max and I were very happy because we could help her.

Using direct speech for the dialogues between the characters. This can make the story livelier.

Giving examples of the places where the writer and his friend looked around for the girl's mum. This allows readers to know that they tried their very best.

Using 'gave us a hug' instead of 'thanked us' makes the ending more descriptive and interesting.
