An Old Man and a Wolf

A long time ago, there was a kind old man living in China. One day, the old man saw a wolf in a mountain. It had cuts all over its body. When the old man got closer to the wolf, it told the old man that an army of soldiers was trying to capture it and it begged him for help. The old man quickly took all the books out of his travelling bag and said, 'Hurry. Jump into my bag so that the soldiers won't see you.' The wolf did so at once.

When the soldiers asked the old man if he had seen a wolf nearby, the old man lied and said he didn't. The soldiers believed him and left the mountain. When the old man was sure that the soldiers had left, he let the wolf out of the bag. After that, the wolf showed its real character. 'You are a very nice man,' it said. 'You have helped me once, but you nearly killed me by putting me in the bag. Now I'm hungry so let me eat you!'

Just then, a young man walked by and heard their conversation. 'What's the matter?' he asked. The old man and the wolf told their sides of the story to the young man. After thinking for some time, the young man said to the old man, 'The wolf should go back in the bag to see if it is really that bad being in the bag. If so, then the wolf shall eat you.' The wolf jumped into the bag immediately. The young man then tied the bag up. He turned to the old man and said, 'What are you waiting for? Kill the wolf now!' It was at this moment that the old man realised that kindness might not always be returned. The wolf was never seen again.
