John is reading an article about red bean puddings. Read it carefully and choose the best answers for Questions 23-28.

Red Bean Puddings

By David Chan

Red bean puddings are a kind of traditional and popular snack in Hong Kong. They are made with red beans, rice flour, sugar and wheat starch. Many tourists visiting Hong Kong love having this snack at street stalls.

Red bean puddings are different from Western-style puddings. One of the major differences is that Western-style puddings are made with butter, wheat flour and eggs. Also, red bean puddings are enjoyed as street snacks but Western restaurants serve puddings as desserts.

How are red bean puddings made? First, put red beans in some water and let them soak for a few hours. Then, cook the beans until they are soft. Next, mix water with wheat starch and rice flour together. At the same time, boil some water and add sugar. After that, put the flour mixture into the sugar water and stir everything well. Put the mixture in small bowls and add the cooked red beans. Lastly, steam the puddings for ten minutes.

So, what makes red bean puddings so unique? Red bean puddings are also called 'small bowl puddings' in Chinese. Small bowls are used when steaming so that the puddings are cooked evenly. This gives the special taste and texture that people love. Also, two wooden sticks are used to take the snack out from the bowl. This makes it look like a huge lollipop with red beans.

A delicious red bean pudding is sweet like honey. The centre part sinks a bit after it has been cooked. These days, you can find packaged red bean puddings in some supermarkets. But you will never buy these ready-made puddings again after you have tasted the fresh puddings made by street hawkers. Red bean puddings are simply incredible!

John is reading an e-mail from his American friend, Kevin. Read it carefully and choose the best answers for Questions 29-35.

From : Kevin Olson <kevinolson@newmail.com>

To : John Lee <johnlee@ultramail.com>

Date : Mon 9 April 20XX 10 pm

Subject : Hi from America

Dear John,

I finally have time to write to you. I landed in New York last Saturday and took some time to adjust to the time difference. But, I still couldn't sleep well last night.

Just now, I looked at some photos we took in Hong Kong. Can you remind me of the place we went to last Tuesday? I remember we took a minibus because there is no MTR station there. There are traditional market stalls and a beach. I bought some Chinese handicrafts there. The place was full of tourists too. I would love to visit that place again when I come to Hong Kong.

My new school term started today. Our school encourages students to be active. Before the first lesson, we play sports in the playground. I usually play basketball with my classmates. At 8:30 am, we hand in our homework and then start the first lesson. Our last lesson finishes at 3 pm.

Like your school, my school requires students to take up an extra-curricular activity. Every Monday and Friday, all students have to stay after school for an extra hour to join school club activities. There are many activities to choose from, like sports, arts and school bands. I chose to play in a rock band today. It was really fun because I am a big fan of rock music. My band mates and I had a great time!

You mentioned that you need to wear your school uniform to school every day. I find it interesting because we are the opposite. However, our school sets rules on suitable casual wear. We usually just wear simple T-shirts and jeans.

I hope this year will not be too difficult and I can't wait to see you again this summer. Stay in touch!

Yours,

Kevin
