

Grace is reading a story about three sisters.

In the Davies family, Amelia, Becky and Corinne's younger brother Liam suffered from serious asthma. To pay for Liam's medical expenses, their single mother worked day and night. One day, Liam suddenly felt very sick and needed an urgent surgery that cost a lot of money. The three sisters wanted to help reduce their mother's burden.

The girls used to tell Liam bedtime stories every night. Their stories were so humorous that he enjoyed them a lot. The girls thought maybe they could read aloud stories on the streets and ask people to pay for their performances. Unfortunately, most passersby didn't listen to them. The girls then included singing and dancing in their storytelling. They successfully impressed a group of audience who were willing to pay for their shows. They finally used the money they earned to save Liam.

15 years later, people called the girls 'the Davies sisters', who were known for writing brilliant play scripts and making contributions to charity.
