The Tsunami (20XX)

Kim Martin

In 2040, the Earth is seriously affected by climate change. People in Thailand experience their first snowfall, a severe drought ruins nearly all the crops in England, and there are many other extreme hazards. To tackle the problem, a network of satellites is designed to protect the planet. It works properly for 10 years until it starts to malfunction. A devastating tsunami is going to destroy the Earth unless Steve Brown, the creator of the satellite network, and his team of scientists repair the system in time.

I initially thought End Game in 2049 was the best film by Howard James after watching it last year. I couldn't believe that he could direct an even better sci-fi film. I enjoyed this film, especially for its special effects. The huge waves looked so real and scary in 3-D that I watched open-mouthed! Moreover, the film was exciting from the beginning to the end so I didn't feel bored. I almost screamed when I saw Steve nearly drown. Steve was my favourite character because he always knows the right thing to do.
