Springfield Drama School — Children’s Drama Course

Studies have shown that drama has numerous positive effects on children’s development. Through discussing with others when preparing for a drama performance, children can build up confidence and improve their communication skills. They will be less afraid to speak in front of a crowd. In a drama performance, children also have the chance to play different roles. From this, they can learn to put themselves in someone’s shoes and become more understanding and considerate. Moreover, there are many dialogues in a drama, which can help children develop a strong memorising skill as they have to memorise the lines in the scripts.

A drama does not only tell a story but also touches people’s hearts. When the audience watch a drama, they imagine themselves being the characters in it, and go through the emotional journey with the characters. A drama can make you laugh, cry or even reflect on yourselves. Through sadness and joy, it inspires people and teaches the moral of the story.
