Part C

Karen is reading an online article about a museum exhibition of dinosaurs. Complete the article by circling the best answers.

Inside the Natural History Museum is the Jane G. Pisano Dinosaur Hall, (1) fans of dinosaurs can wander (2) the two floors and see the exhibitions of 20 skeletons of the (3) dinosaurs, which used to be the most (4) animals to have lived on Earth around 245 million years ago.

One of the main attractions of the exhibition is the three T. rex skeletons, (5) are situated right (6) the skeletons of other dinosaurs, at the centre of the Dinosaur Hall. To unravel the mysteries of dinosaurs, visitors can study the fossils mounted

(7) the walls of the hallways. The fossils tell us that, as the largest and the most (8) meat-eating animal of all time, T. rex has razor-like sharp teeth, which can measure 30 cm (9) one end (9) the other and can puncture straight (10) the bones of its prey.

Another highlight of the exhibition is that the evolutionary tree shows us that birds and crocodiles, which have been evolving (11) hundreds of millions of years, might be 'dinosaurs' that still live today. But one thing for certain is that scientists (12) study paleontology (fossils of organisms) will continue to provide us with more striking discoveries.
